

5's Confession

Once 5 has been revealed as the murderer, give them this confession to read out to the others.

"I guess I can't hide it any more, yes I killed Rex and Joan, but I did I had to protect my way of life. You see, I am not really Goaler Keeper, I am his identical twin brother Maurice. When we were younger, we were both brilliant footballers but then I was involved in a car accident and had to have my right foot amputated due to an infection. They fitted me with a false foot so I could still walk, but I was told that I would never play football again. At first I was devastated, especially when my brother became a famous international footballer, but over time, I came to realise that I could reap the benefits of his success just because I looked like him. I would often go to film premiers or high profile events pretending to be him and would always be given free meals and gifts wherever I went as people always thought I was Goaler. That is how I came to be at the Southern Star. I had convinced Rex to hire me the biggest suite at a local hotel and give me an unlimited account at the casino when in reality, I had very little money to spend. After only a few hours, I had lost a large amount of money, far more than I could afford. I guess that Rex became nervous and decided to do a bit of background checking on me. He came up to me by the slot machines and told me that he knew who I really was. He said that unless I settled up my bill and left immediately, he would call security and have me arrested. I started panicking. I knew I couldn't pay the bill but want my cover blown by being arrested, so I decided to make a run for it. As Rex turned to walk away from the slot machines, I took off my false foot and hit him really hard around the back of the head. I hadn't intended to kill him, just knock him out. I didn't get the chance to make my escape as his body was soon found and I was horrified to find out that he was dead. After the police had been, I heard Joan. R. List mention that she had received a note from Rex prior to his death, saying that he had a good story for her and that she was going to hunt around the offices to try and find out what that story was. I was worried that Rex had left something incriminating laying around about me so followed Joan down to the offices. I don't think she even heard me come in to the office behind her, she was too busy looking a security file on me! I had no choice, I had to get rid of her before the story became public and ruined my life. I picked up a sharp letter opener from one of the desks, walked up behind her and stabbed her in the back. She didn't have time to even make a sound. I feel so bad about killing two people, but it is there fault for trying to ruin my life."
